

Example: Let X denote the outer diameter of a bolt in mm and let Y denote the inner diameter of a nut in mm. Assume a person randomly chooses one bolt and then one nut. Therefore, we can reasonably assume that these two random variables are independent.